Dear Andy,

I'm really pleased you can do the art-work for our new hits album. Here are 2 boxes of material which you can use, and the record.

In my short sweet experience, the more complicated the format of the album, e.g. more complex than just pages or fold-out, the more fucked-up the reproduction and agonising the delays. But, having said that, I leave it in your capable hands to do what ever you want.....and please write back saying how much money you would like.

Doubtless a Mr.Al Steckler will contact you in New York, with any further information. He will probably look nervous and say "Hurry up" but take little notice.

Love,

MICK JAGGER

► Premier seeks to head off Tory rebellion ► EU negotiator calls for UK to be realistic

KATE ALLEN AND ALEX BARNIER — LONDON

Theresa May yesterday bowed to pressure to set out her Brexit plan before triggering the Article 50 exit clause next year, as the EU's chief negotiator, Michel Barnier, set an October 2018 deadline for completing exit talks.

Mrs May attempted to head off a House of Commons rebellion by pro-European Conservative MPs today by agreeing to reveal her Brexit strategy — although in practice details of the “plan” may turn out to be sketchy.

The prime minister will also urge a vote in the House to flush out diehard Remain supporters by inviting MPs to back an amendment committing them to respect the vote to leave the EU.

While Mrs May's team at Westminster was attempting to manage parliamentary unrest about her exit strategy, Mr Barnier said in Brussels that Britain should be realistic about what EU trade terms could be agreed during Brexit talks that are compressed into just 15 months.

Promising to “keep calm and negotiate” since the UK invokes the EU's formal withdrawal procedure, Mr Barnier stressed that his priority would be maintaining the unity of the remaining 27 EU members.

“All in all there will be less than 18 months to negotiate. That will be short,” he said, referring to the need for EU preparations plus some four to five months for ratification by the UK, 27 national parliaments and the European Parliament.

For these reasons Mr Barnier is aiming for a draft exit deal by October 2018. Downing Street said it was “the first [it had] heard” of such a timeline but it was broadly in line with expectations.

At Westminster, Mrs May has tried to control details of her Brexit plan for fear of weakening her negotiating position but yesterday she agreed to a Labour demand that she publish some indications. At least 20 pro-European Tories were prepared to rebel on the issue, according to Anna Soubey, the former business minister.

Downing Street said Mrs May had already promised more details before activating Article 50 and some objectives were already becoming clearer, for example her willingness for Britain to carry on paying money to the EU for single-market access.

Michel Barnier set an October 2018 deadline for talks, a timeline about which Downing Street said it had no knowledge.

Labour called it a “longly straggled” climbdown but the concession may be less significant than it sounds. Mrs May's allies claim she has already given details of her “plan”, explaining to MPs last month the broad parameters of her objective. These include controlling free movement and securing “the best possible” trading deal.

Privately senior Tories said Labour conceded they would have put Mrs May under more pressure if they had demanded a detailed white paper on the plan.
